Which Farmer Buys the Better Seed?

Two Farmers Buy Clover Seed

One, knowing quality, buys Quaker Brand Red Clover from his local dealer.

The other, thinking more about price, buys a grade which is described to him as "the best."

Who Drives the Better Bargain?

THE man who bought his seed merely described as "the best" possibly paid less than the farmer who bought Quaker, a well known brand.
Maybe he didn't notice the test on the seed he bought.
Perhaps he failed to see the weed seeds in his seeds.
It may be that the seed was small and shriveled and of poor germination.
But this man paid "less" than the man who bought Quaker Brand, forgetting that cheap things are always the most expensive.

BUT the man who buys Quaker buys more than the seed in the bag. He buys the reliability of the largest field seed house in Pennsylvania.
He buys the dependability of his local merchant.
He buys seed which has been cleaned by experts to remove harmful weeds.
He buys seed which was properly analyzed and tested.
He buys seed which has been selected because of its adaptability to this territory.
He buys seed that has produced bountifully year after year.

When you buy field seeds, think of these two men.
Who, in your opinion, drives the better bargain?

Quotations above are for No. European Red Clover seed re-cleaned over various processes to remove impurities peculiar to foreign grown seeds. Imported Clover seed may be sold at much lower prices in original heavy burlap sacks. It has always been our policy, however, to oppose the distribution to the farmer of foreign grown Clover seed from original imported packages account of the danger of sowing noxious weed seeds.

The records of origin for Alfalfa and Red Clover seed sold by us are kept in accordance with a plan approved by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and are maintained under the supervision of that Department. Under this system and by special arrangement with that Department we are authorized to issue verified origin seed certificates for such seed, the locality of production of which has been verified by a Federal seed inspector.
